Smart Home Working

Working from home could become a challenge for many who used to go to the office every day. The furnishings, technology and the interior design of the environment can play a substantial role in making the change as pleasant as possible. In order to keep healthy at work in the home office, it is important to take the organization of the work place and ergonomics into account.

As inviting as it may be, a sofa, armchair or bed is not be the best place to work for long periods. They are neither beneficial to work morale nor do they help you assume a correct posture. The furniture from the Sedus Home Office Programme is designed to support optimal working posture and prevent postural problems.

In addition to ergonomics, the harmony between the furniture and the room also has a significant influence on well-being and productivity. The timeless and high-quality products of the Sedus Home Office Programme make your home office complete ensuring that your home remains a comfortable and pleasant space.
